Here and There

Editorial By ALEX. H. WASHBURN

A COUPLE of contradictory items in today's news read like this:

The State of Arkansas spends $100,000 for a viaduct at Donaldson to carry highway No. 67 over the Missouri Pacific main line so foolhardy automobile drivers won't get hit by express trains.

But automobiles themselves move with the speed of a railroad train—and another news item today tells us that a car and a truck collided the other night because the truck had run out of gas and was stalled in the roadway.

One-hundred-thousand-dollar viaducts can't prevent accidents so long as auto drivers violate the first rule of railroading, which is: Never stop on the main line.

Two Arrested at Nashville With Gangsters' Arms

Roy Traxler, Ex-Oklahoma Convict, Shot in Hip by Officers

COMPANION IS HELD

Traxler Escapes From Hotel Fight, But Is Recaptured on Highway

Roy Traxler, who told officers he had served terms in the Oklahoma penitentiary, was wounded and captured in a gun battle on the Nashville-Lockesburg highway late Monday following seizure of a stolen car containing a high-powered rifle, a sawed-off shotgun, a bullet-proof vest and other gangland equipment.

Officers had been searching for Traxler ever since Sunday night when he escaped from the Nashville hotel, at Nashville, in an earlier exchange of shots.

In the Sunday night encounter officers arrested Vaughn Edmonds, a companion whom Traxler had picked up near Hope and taken to his Nashville hotel.

Two Men Jailed
Both Traxler and Edmonds are held for investigation, in the Nashville jail. Officers told The Star this story:

Traxler, driving a 1935 Buick four-door sedan, Arkansas license 162-596, registered in the name of an under-termined Hope resident, took a room in the Nashville hotel last Friday. When he returned Sunday with the man Edmonds the hotel people became suspicious and called officers.

State Ranger J. H. Sewell, State Revenue Agent Coy Dildy, and Howard County Sheriff Clarence Dildy went to the hotel Sunday night and found Edmonds sitting in the car. They discovered the guns and ammunition—and asked where Traxler was. Edmonds told them he was in his room.

The officers met him coming down, and a gunfight followed—Traxler escaping.

Search Is Begun
Edmonds was taken to jail, and the officers began a systematic search of the highways around Nashville. State Ranger Sewell told The Star Monday night.

Late Monday the three officers found Traxler on the Nashville-Lockesburg road and shot it out with him. State Ranger Sewell wounded Traxler in the right hip, but Sewell's gun then jammed. But for the presence of the other officer he would have been killed, he said. As it was, Traxler ceased firing and surrendered.

Robinson Attacks Hoover's Speech

Democrat Declares Federal Debt to Be 30% Billion—and Not 35

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—Senator Robinson of Arkansas, the Democratic leader, Monday night accused Herbert Hoover of "misstatements and distortions" in his Oakland speech attacking New Deal spending and policies.

In a statement issued through the Democratic National Committee, Robinson asserted "Mr. Hoover's statement is what might reasonably have been expected of an ex-president, defeated in his effort at re-election, who is seeking to get back."

Hoover was en route to New York when the statement was issued. Lawrence Richey, Washington representative of the former president, said he would meet Hoover in Manhattan Wednesday morning, and that conferences with political and personal friends would follow.

Another Democratic spokesman, Speaker Byrnes, told newspapermen in his office that "there is every reason to believe that Mr. Hoover's statement is a distortion of the facts."

Robinson said Hoover's "alleged statistics" on the national debt and the deficit "indicate bookkeeping errors ranging from $5,000,000,000 to $9,000,000,000."

Hoover said expenditures are "running over $8,000,000,000 a year." Robinson declared the budget estimate to show total expenditures will be $7,752,000,000. Hoover said "the unpaid government obligations which will fall on the taxpayer at the end of the Roosevelt administration will exceed $35,000,000,000."

Robinson said that on June 30, 1936, "the total national debt will be approximately $30,724,000,000."

Killing of Americans in War Zone Would Be Blow to Nation's Neutrality Stand

Only Safeguard in World Crisis Is Firm Public Stand

Sinking of Lusitania, With Loss of 124 Americans, Embroiled U. S.

BRITAIN AND U. S. A. Pressure on America Would Be Terrific If English Get Into War

Outstanding question before the American people is that of our neutrality in the next war. Action already taken and to be taken, in the light of events of 1914-18, to preserve our neutrality is described in a series of three articles by Willis Thornton, NEA Service writer, this being the last of the series.

By WILLIS THORNTON
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON.—All the haggling over the theoretical rights of neutrals in trade is not half so likely to drag America in to a war as the killing of Americans by combatants. When the question is "where were they, and what were they doing there?"

T. W. Gregory, attorney-general under Woodrow Wilson, wrote in 1923 that "up to the time that Germany began its atrocious submarine warfare, culminating in the sinking of the Lusitania, we had far less cause for complaint against her than we had against Great Britain..." The strict-by commercial complaints had not yet become decisive.

One hundred twenty-four Americans, many of them prominent, were gasping down to death in the Irish Sea when a German submarine, seeking to sink indiscriminately and without warning all British shipping, sank the luxury liner. Though it was two years (from May 7, 1915, to April 6, 1917, before war actually was declared, there is no doubt that the Lusitania's sinking remained a primary cause for America's entering the war.

What might happen to Americans if another such war sweeps the world? What if American Dies?

The imminent danger in Ethiopia may seem to have been averted by cancellation of an oil exploitation contract negotiated by an Englishman, but involving "100 per cent American capital."

Suppose American engineers were sent to Ethiopia to develop such an oil concession, and they fell afoul of an Italian advance and were killed? Would it lead the United States into war?

This sort of speculation and efforts to forearm against it occupy the Washington neutrality hunters these days.

Suppose Italian planes bombed Addis Ababa and American missionaries and nurses were killed? Such things may happen.

Should a European war involve, say, Italy and Germany, and Britain, with her great sea power, remained neutral? Britain would certainly make an effort to preserve neutral rights at sea, just as the United States did during the World War.

Britain has even more at stake. The pressure on the United States to join in such a move would be tremendous.

Certain Trouble Source
In a war involving Germany and Russia, Germany would almost certainly blockade the whole Baltic sea, and the first step of Japan in a war with Russia would be to make a zone of the entire Pacific coast of Russia, perhaps the whole east coast of Asia.

Should Americans be allowed to travel in such zones during war? On the one hand, they would be in the line of fire. On the other hand, they would be in the line of fire.

On armed ships? On private business? What if such Americans are killed, their status not defined in advance?

An effort was made to solve this problem, too, during the World War. Early in 1916 (nearly a year after the Lusitania and a year before the United States entered the war) the famous Gore-McLemore resolutions

Stalled Truck Is Blamed for Crash

Hope Party of Four Collides With Truck on Bridge Near Prescott

A stalled truck in the middle of the highway at night—one of the motorist's public's greatest menaces—was blamed here Tuesday for an automobile crash last Saturday night that resulted in injuries to four local persons.

The injured are: Miss Elizabeth Middlebrooks, Miss Louise Hanegan, Archie Chambliss and John Barlow. None are seriously hurt.

Miss Middlebrooks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Middlebrooks, was in bed Tuesday at her home on Park Drive. She is suffering from injuries about the head and body. An X-ray examination revealed no broken bones.

Miss Hanegan, daughter of Mrs. A. F. Hanegan, 321 South Elm, was also confined to her bed. She is suffering from a head injury and shock. Her condition is not serious.

John Barlow, proprietor of Hotel Barlow, escaped with slight bruises. Archie Chambliss, youthful employee of the hotel, sustained injuries about the face and head.

The accident occurred four miles west of Prescott on Highway 67. Mr. Barlow, driver of the car, said that he came upon the truck at a bridge. The truck, Mr. Barlow said, was parked in the middle of the highway. The gasoline supply had given out.

After the crash, Misses Middlebrooks and Hanegan, and young Chambliss were taken to a hospital at Prescott for treatment.

Returning to the scene of the accident, Mr. Barlow said the truck had disappeared. Its occupants, about half a dozen men, who witnesses the accident, also had disappeared. Their names were not learned.

Preceding the crash this side of Prescott, Mr. Barlow, Miss Hanegan, Miss Middlebrooks and a young man whose name was given as Peterson, had escaped injury in a minor accident near Arkadelphia.

Peterson's car, on route to Hope, was sideswiped by another car enroute toward Hot Springs. Peterson's car, put out of commission, was taken to an Arkadelphia garage. Peterson remained in Arkadelphia. No one was hurt.

Mr. Barlow telephoned to Hope, and young Chambliss drove the Barlow car, a coupe, to Arkadelphia to return the three stranded persons. The accident occurred en route home.

Donaldson Viaduct on No. 67 Is Opened

State Completes Overpass Eliminating Mo. Pac. Grade-Crossing

Commercial travelers reaching Hope Tuesday reported to The Star that the State Highway Department's new viaduct carrying No. 67 across the main line of the Missouri Pacific railroad at Donaldson was completed and opened to traffic Monday.

The roadway is of gravel at present, it being the policy of the highway department to allow dumps to settle thoroughly before paving with concrete. The No. 67 approaches on either side of Donaldson never have been paved, waiting on the construction of the viaduct.

The viaduct is similar to that west of Fulton, which also carries No. 67 across the Missouri Pacific, eliminating a grade-crossing.

Mussolini Warned by General Staff Against Ethiopian War

Incredible Difficulties to Face Invaders in Mountains—Of 250,000 Soldiers, Only 25,000 May Ever Reach Addis Ababa

By CHARLES P. NUTTER
Associated Press Correspondent

LONDON.—(AP)—Recognized by British military strategists here as the greatest weakness in any Italian effort to subjugate Ethiopia is the perilously thin and dangerous long line of Italian communications.

Modernizing the old adage that an army moves on its stomach, observers here point out the almost staggering problems and supply involved in Mussolini's East African campaign.

A single break in this long line of communications, which stretches back from Eritrea nearly 3,000 miles to Italian ports, might turn a victorious march of blackshirts into the stupendous debacle of a retreat of 250,000 starving, thirsty men.

Suez Canal Called Vital
Up to Eritrea the line of supplies stretches through peaceful friendly waters and country, provided the vital Suez canal is not closed. Observers believe such a step would turn the East African campaign into a nightmare of route.

At Eritrea, however, Mussolini's real problem, of keeping his line of supplies open through enemy country, begins. It is well beyond 500 miles from Asmara to Addis Ababa—and the route lies through swamps and across deserts, high mountains and deep canyons. Use of wheeled vehicles through this country is impossible, and probably could be accomplished only after years of labor by Italian road and bridge builders.

A foot and upon mules, horses and camels, Mussolini must be prepared to move supplies along this perilous route toward the Ethiopian capital. Every foot of the ground is certain to be contested by savage fighters, challenging not alone the army vanguards but the thousands of troops who must be left at periodic intervals to guard the line of supply.

Lessons in Old War
Military experts say that for every man an army has on the firing line there must be ten behind the lines to keep supplies coming up. This ratio must automatically be increased in Ethiopia by the staggering difficulties of nature and lack of modern transport.

GENEVA, Switzerland.—(AP)—A plan to give Great Britain a League of Nations mandate, by vote of the assembly, to supervise sanctions (boycotts) against Italy was discussed Tuesday by some of the League powers, representatives of non-European countries disclosed.

The idea behind the move was that Britain, supported by other interested powers, should take the leadership in the sanctions program and that Britain should be requested to adopt the initiative in accordance with developments in the situation.

To Oust Italian Envoy
GENEVA, Switzerland.—(AP)—The League of Nations was informed Tuesday that the Ethiopian government has asked the Italian minister to leave Addis Ababa and his entire staff to leave Ethiopia immediately.

The reason for this ejection is alleged misuse of the Italian legion's radio station for "the creation of internal disorders in the country to which he is accredited."

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia.—(AP)—An Ethiopian official said Tuesday that the Italian army on the northern frontier is suffering wholesale desertions of its native soldiers.

"Information received from the north shows that Ethiopians serving in the Italian army are deserting en masse," this official asserted.

"Fifty armed men are under the command of an important chief arrived at Makale, south of Addis Ababa, with Italian machine guns."

"In the Agame region 200 armed Ethiopians surrendered to authorities."

WITH THE ITALIAN ARMY IN THE FIELD, Addis Ababa.—Benito Mussolini's generals fortified their new-war lines on the northern Ethiopian front Monday night.

The Blackshirts, fresh from their avenging capture of Addis Ababa, were anxious to press on into the land of the hated "negus"—Emperor Haile Selassie. Their officers restrained their enthusiasm. It seemed possible the armies would spend some days consolidating their position along the line from Adigrat to Addis before striking again.

Nevertheless, the Ethiopian warriors must be driven from the mountains directly behind Addis, and this the Italian artillery plans to do.

Prince Addeberio, duke of Bergamo, visited general headquarters Monday after seeing his division to advanced lines. The armies dug in to meet the Africans, reported massing in the mountains to the south of Addis.

Reserves Move Up
Crude roads swarmed with reserves, moving up to the front established Sunday when the Italians entered Addis.

Wary lest the Ethiopian commanders order a sudden counter attack on Addis, the Italians established strong outposts. Planes kept a constant watch for the enemy from the sky.

The Ethiopian concentration to the south was reported "some distance" from Addis. From the reports of scouts, many believed the advancing Italian army might meet its first great conflict in the vicinity of Makale, 60 miles southeast of here.

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia.—(AP)—Ethiopians felt Italian troops had failed to penetrate Ethiopia at any vital point Monday as the war entered its fifth day. They said the line of defense had been pushed back only in the extreme northwest where the Fascists advanced in the Addis and Adigrat sections.

But even if the Italians should eventually thrust this line forward further into Ethiopia, they would still be approximately 200 miles from the heart of the country, which consists of natural bastions 10,000 feet high, protected in turn by gigantic cliffs between which lead the narrowest and most difficult mountain passes.

It is here that Emperor Haile Selassie will make his chief resistance with armies as desperate and brave as ever fought for any country.

YOUR HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN

Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

Variety of Headaches Caused By Sinuses

A headache is just a pain in the head. But there are so many kinds of headaches and so many causes of headaches that it would give you a pain just thinking of them.

One group, however, that has brought on all sorts of headaches is that concerned with the sinuses. These come usually from difficult breathing and congestion.

The pain coming from infection of the sinuses is usually worse in the middle of the day or in the morning, and tends to get better in the late afternoon or evening. The reason for this is that the sinuses begin to drain after the person concerned has been on his feet or in an upright position for eight or ten hours.

The degree of pain is not always a direct indication of the extent of the infection. Sometimes a very small infection in one sinus will cause a very large pain, and in other cases a very large infection in a sinus will have relatively little pain.

In a good many cases a large amount of infected material may be taken out of the sinus, and yet the patient will not have suffered pain.

Since there are several sinuses distributed in various portions of the head, the pains associated with infections in any of them vary.

The frontal sinuses are in the forehead just above the nose. Infection of these sinuses usually causes pain right where the sinuses are located, and the pain is usually limited to the side involved.

The maxillary sinuses are in the cheeks above the upper row of teeth. An infection in these sinuses is more likely to cause pain above the eye than directly in the sinus, although pain is also frequently felt in the upper jaw.

If the teeth are jarred, or if there is a jar to the whole body, pain will be felt in this sinus in the presence of infection.

The sphenoidal sinuses and the ethmoid sinuses are in the skull in back of the nose. Sometimes, when there is infection in the sphenoidal sinuses, the pain will be felt in the back of the head on the side involved, and sometimes even in the ear on the side involved, or behind the eye.

An infection in the ethmoid sinus usually is felt as a pain between the eyes.

Now you should realize that pains, like those caused by infection of the sinuses, are also caused by a great variety of other conditions. Serious infections of the teeth, disturbances of the eyes associated with strain or with the wrong kind of glasses, inflammation in the kidneys, and colds of various sorts may set up headaches much like those associated with infection of the sinuses.

Lawrence's Account of Arabian Uprising

Few books have ever been quite so interesting and cleverly presented as the "Seven Pillars of Wisdom," written by England's famous revolt-maker, the late T. E. Lawrence. The redeeming feature is that not many books are so much worth reading as this one, either.

This is the bulky volume of which the famous "Revolt in the Desert" was a condensation.

In it, Lawrence tells how he went into Arabia to see how England could capitalize on the tribesmen's dissatisfaction with Turkish rule.

He got the tribes together and induced them to fight for a free and independent Arabia; he directed their military efforts with rare skill, doing much to produce that behind-the-scenes confusion on the Turkish front which helped make possible Allenby's great triumph in Syria; and at the peace conference he saw his

The GOLDEN FEATHER

BEGIN HERE TODAY

JEAN DUNN, pretty, 21-year-old secretary, and BOBBY WALLACE, young automobile salesman, spend an evening at The Golden Feather night club.

ALF LANNING, the proprietor, introduces them to Sandy Harkins, who explains he is in Dover on business. Sandy and Jean dance. When he asks if he can telephone her she evades.

Later Sandy has a mysterious conversation with two men who mention Jean's employer, DONALD MONTAGUE, and hint they "may be able to do some business."

LARRY GLENN, federal agent, talks with Bobby and Jean. After they leave, MICK HAGAN, detective on the local police force, joins Larry who shows him several photographs of a pretty girl and asks, "Ever see her before?"

Larry explains he is on the trail of WINSTON LEWIS, bank robber, and hopes to locate him through this girl, EVELYN BRADY.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER VI

DONALD MONTAGUE signed the last of the sheaf of letters that lay on his desk, shoved the little pile aside, and said, "There—that's done." He looked up at Jean and said, "Well, if you'll get these off, Miss Dunn, you might as well call it a day."

Jean picked up the letters and started for the outer office and her own desk. Glancing at her wrist watch as she did so, she exclaimed, "But Mr. Montague—it's only half-past eleven."

"What of it?" he asked with an air of paternal amusement. "It's Saturday, isn't it? I've a luncheon engagement and I'm not coming back this afternoon. You can use the extra hour, can't you?"

"Oh—of course—and thanks," she said, slightly confused. She withdrew, prepared the letters for mailing, and five minutes later was on her way out.

Born and reared in a small town, she knew moments when the great city was almost unbearably oppressive and confining; and she suddenly realized that this afternoon she must manage somehow to get out into the open country, away from the crowds and the noises and the bustle and confusion of Dover.

"I'd like to take a long hike across the fields," she mused. "Let's see—who could I get to go with me?"

She thought of Bobby; but she knew he would be working all day, and she also knew that an afternoon in the country would revive his romantic instincts and cause him to speak pleadingly of marriage and a little apartment. Today she didn't want to be proposed to.

Hastily she mentally scanned her list of girl friends. One or another of them, surely, could be induced to join the expedition.

"I'll hurry home and change, and then start telephoning," she thought. She walked to the corner and caught her street car.

When she had reached her apartment, bathed and changed her frock for a rough tweed skirt, woolen stockings, low-heeled shoes and a sweater, she discovered that she was ravenously hungry. "The telephoning can wait," she told herself, and she went to the little kitchenette to prepare a lunch. Just as she was plugging in the percolator, the telephone rang.

She scampered into the other room and answered it.

"Miss Dunn?" said a man's voice. "Well, now isn't that lucky for you? I didn't think I'd be able to raise you on a nice afternoon like this?"

THE voice was vaguely familiar but no more. She frowned and said, "Who is this?"

A laugh came over the wire. "You wouldn't break my heart and tell me you've forgotten me already?" said the voice, tensely. "I'm the long, lanky guy that man-aged to get a dance with you at the Golden Feather the other night.

Remember? My name's Harkins—Sandy Harkins."

"Oh," said Jean. "Oh, yes, Mr. Harkins."

"Well, listen here, good-looking. I'll bet down where you come from you like to go horseback riding on your afternoon off, don't you?"

"Horseback riding? Why, yes, but—"

"I thought so," said Sandy. "You looked like a girl that knew how to ride. Listen, how'd it be if I came around and took you out to a riding academy and we got a couple of nags and went for a little ride—huh, how about it?"

To ride a horse again—something she had not done since she left Maplehurst. She suddenly discovered that that was what she wanted to do this afternoon more than anything else; and before she knew that she had made up her mind she heard herself saying, "Oh, I'd love to."

"Kayo, baby," said the breezy Mr. Harkins. "I'll be at your front gate in half an hour."

In precisely half an hour her bell rang. Sandy met her in the little lobby on the first floor and they were in his roadster—it was a flashy yellow thing which looked only a little shorter and less powerful than one of the navy's newest destroyers—almost before she knew it.

HALF an hour's drive got them out of the city. They followed a graveled country road for a few miles, and at last came to a huge, white-washed barn, so big that it completely overshadowed the little cottage in front of it. Along the side of the barn there was a big sign, "The West Park Riding Academy."

Sandy drove in, and a few minutes later a groom had brought their horses and they were riding side by side down a leafy lane, which led them, at last, to the top of a rounded hill, from which they could look down a long, grass-grown slope toward a little stream and a clump of woods.

Sandy had been watching her with a knowing eye, and he evidently had satisfied himself that she was quite at home in the saddle.

"Come on," he cried. "Tack you to the woods!"

And they went off down the slope, the horses' hoofs drumming on the springy turf, while the wind whipped the ends of the scarf Jean had bound about her hair, and she laughed aloud from sheer happiness and excitement. They came nearer and nearer to the little stream; at this point it was no more than a brook, not six feet wide, with firm banks. Jean boldly spurred directly toward it and took her horse across it in one graceful leap. Then she reined in, and came to a halt at the edge of the woods. Sandy was beside her, looking at her admiringly.

"Say," he said, "you can ride, all right."

She was breathless, laughing, with little wisps of hair escaping from under the scarf.

"I used to ride almost every day, down home," she said.

"Good girl," said Sandy. "You did that jump like a champion."

Their eyes met in comradely appraisal; then, with one accord, they turned their horses' heads and followed a shaded lane through the trees.

It was cool under the trees, and the horses' hoofs made no sound on the black spongy earth. Sandy rose with effortless ease, his long body relaxed loosely in the saddle. "You must have ridden a lot yourself," said Jean. He nodded. "I was brought up on a horse," he said. "Not here. Out west."

"Cowboy?"

"My folks owned a ranch."

They rode on farther in silence. Presently Jean asked him, "What do you do, anyway?"

He looked at her coolly, for a province along the Selti river. Dadjaz Match Ayalu forces the Italians with 100,000 soldiers. East of Ayalu, from the Tobiokere river to beyond the lofty position of Adigrat stands another army of 200,000, directed by the commander-in-chief of all Northern troops, Ras Seyoum. Premier Mussolini, Ethiopian sources asserted, tried to incite Ras Seyoum against the present emperor by offering him the throne of Ethiopia under an Italian protectorate but Ras Seyoum discovered him as implacable foe of Italy as was his uncle, Emperor Menelik.

Supporting Ras Seyoum in the northeast is Dadjaz Hailu Selassie, son-in-law of the emperor, with 50,000 troops.

Immediately to the south, on the eastern edge of a great central plateau at Dessye, is Crown Prince Asfaul with 100,000 warriors. Thither the emperor, himself, with Minister of War Ras Mulugueta, is preparing to go with a still larger army which is now rushing to Addis Ababa from southwestern provinces.

Two hundred miles east of Dessye, beyond the barren Danakil desert, strung along the Eritrean border facing Mussolini's forces are 30,000 Muslim tribesmen.

"Oh," he said, "I just sort of travel around, from here to there and back."

"Lucky," said Jean. "It must be nice, not to be tied down."

"It is," said Sandy.

THEY came out of the woods into an unpaved country road. It led them in a gently undulating course past the woodland, along the edge of a prosperous-looking farm and around a bend to an ancient wooden bridge over a small river.

They talked lazily as they rode. Sandy seemed a strange combination of frankness and reticence. He spoke of life on the western plains, of going hunting in the Osage hills, of nights under the stars in fair-weather camps; but he seemed to be reticent to say much about the present, or about his reasons for leaving that open western country.

"You must want to get back there," said Jean. He looked at her soberly, and when he grinned, at last, there was something wistful in his eyes. "Yeah, I guess maybe I do," he said. " reckon I will, too, some day."

They left the river and came out in a broad pasture lot. Beyond the level expanse of grass they could see the roof of the riding academy barn rising above a clump of trees.

"Another race?" said Sandy abruptly. Jean answered by leaning forward and spurring her mount forward. Again they went drumming across the springy earth, and again a wild sense of physical exhilaration and mental well-being took possession of the girl, so that she found herself laughing aloud, for no especial reason, when she finally reined in her horse at the far end of the meadow.

Sandy came up beside her and pulled his horse to a halt. Then suddenly he leaned over, slipped his arm about her shoulders, and kissed her on the mouth.

Thought is deeper than all speech,
Feeling deeper than all thought;
Soul to soul can never teach
What unto themselves was taught.
Man by man was never seen;
All our deep communing fails
To remove the shadowy screen,
Only when the sun of love
Melts the scattered stars of thought,
Only when we live above
What the dim-eyed world hath taught.
Only when our souls are fed
By the fount which gave them birth,
And by inspiration led
Which they never drew from earth,
We, like parted drops of rain,
Swelling till they meet and run,
Shall be all absorbed again,
Melting, flowing into one.

Only Safeguard In

were debated in Congress. They provided that the U. S. government would issue no passports to Americans sailing on armed belligerent liners.

By this time both President Wilson and a rising public sentiment joined in defeating the resolutions. By standing firm on the principle that American neutrals had the right to travel where and how they pleased despite the war, America's eventual entry was practically assured.

The plan to enforce the rights of American neutral ships by arming them was proposed after diplomatic relations with Germany had been severed, but this plan was beaten in the senate by a filibuster.

An effort was then made to carry out the policy without Congress' authority, but as the first armed merchant ships sailed only a month before war was actually declared, little test of the effect was made.

Propaganda, about which the United States learned something during the World war, will be with us again in a bigger and better way if there should be a new war.

All the tried-and-true methods developed in 1914-1918 will be brought to bear on American opinion, with new ones added.

The universal efficiency of radio communication, developed largely since the World war, eliminates national borders and dependence on cables, and gives any country at war a direct channel to the ears of neutrals.

British Cut Cable But this has its good side, too. The first act of the British navy during the World war was to dredge up and cut the direct cable from Germany to the United States.

Thereafter, almost all European news had to come to America through London. There it passed through a filter of British censorship.

Matter unfavorable to the Allied cause or favorable to the Central Powers was simply thrown out or altered. Repeated and bitter protests by American newspapers and correspondents netted exactly nothing.

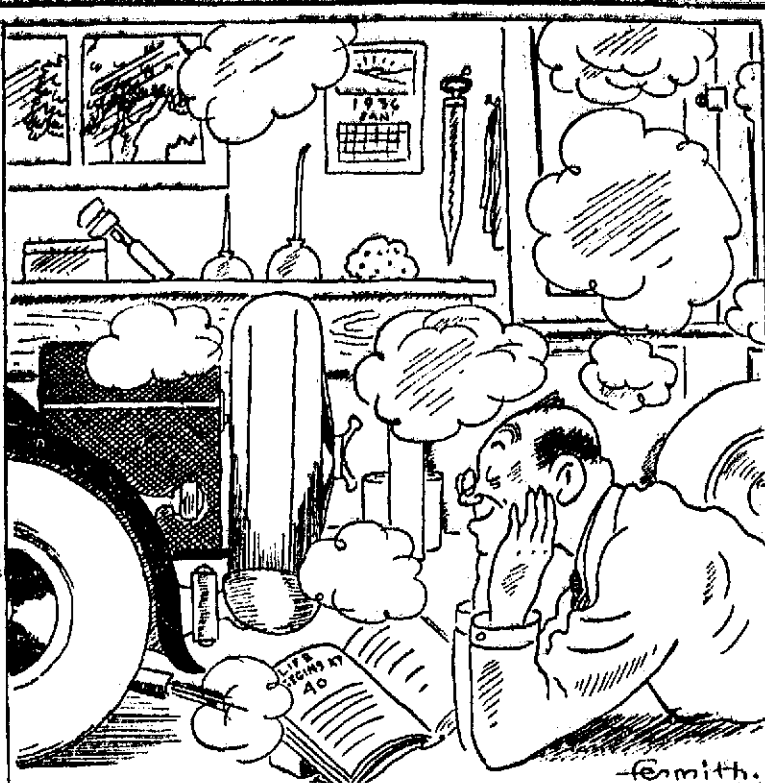

For a while mail from neutral countries was uncensored, but even that was tampered with later, and news sent by mail was always so much altered by the British cables as to be worth little.

A rough idea of how much improvement has been made over this wartime censorship may be had from the fact that American newspaper correspondents are simply thrown out of Russia, Germany, or Italy if they write things which displease the governments of those countries.

And this even before there is any war. You may guess for yourself what will happen to impartial news if war is declared.

Some of the cruder lies in the war propaganda of 1914-1918 have been exposed as sheer deliberate fabrications, such as the story that the Germans were pressing into fates the bodies of their dead soldiers.

Control Carbon Monoxide

Year by year the deadly traffic toll reaches new peaks. In the thick of the battle to reduce this loss of life are state Motor Vehicle Administrators. Twelve of them, officers and members of the American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators, have contributed a series of articles describing the major causes of automobile accidents. Number Five in the series: "Control Carbon Monoxide" follows:

By MICHAEL A. CONNOR
Commissioner of Motor Vehicles, Connecticut,
Member, American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators.

CARBON monoxide poisoning is invisible death. It lurks literally in the air. Although it is never listed as a cause in the tables of automobile accidents, it is the real agent of death in many instances where indefinite causes are given.

One in every ten accidents last year were accidents where "cars drove off the roadway," killing more than 3,800 and injuring more than 57,000 persons, according to statistics of a member company of the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters. Undoubtedly the stupor of the driver by carbon monoxide gas caused many of these cars to leave the road. All motorists know of instances where they or their friends "fell asleep at the wheel." No one stops to think that it may have been a matter of being drugged by carbon monoxide rather than falling asleep.

Carbon monoxide gas cannot be seen, smelled or tasted. Two per cent of it in the air is poisonous, four per cent is fatal. It comprises at least 15 per cent of the gas discharged through the exhaust pipe of a car. Safe discharge of this deadly mixture is made impossible

Relaxing of Potato Control Is Urged

But Eastern Committee Demands General Enforcement of Law

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Sharp modifications of the potato control law was recommended to the AAA Monday by a producers' committee.

The committee, however, urged enforcement of the act as it stands for the next allotment year beginning December 1, 1935.

The committee, headed by B. D. Ayres of Acron, Va., requested Secretary Wallace to ask Congress in January for these five amendments to the control law:

Increase of automatic allotment exemption from five to 50 bushels.
Provision for a referendum upon approval of two-thirds of producers entitled to an allotment necessary for continuance of control after first year.
Provision to exempt specifically the consumer from penalties with reference to stamping and packaging potatoes.
Provision for growers who sell direct to the consumer to file returns on sale to eliminate attaching stamps to potatoes.
Provision for regulation of shipments of potatoes in interstate commerce in excess of grower allotments.

The committee suggested a referendum to obtain a sentiment of growers toward enforcement of the law.

legal safeguard is a steadfast public opinion which demands it.

Vivid Picture by Twain They know that the best description of the slippery road that leads down to war is the one Mark Twain wrote many years ago, before there was any Spanish war or any World war: "The loud little handful—as usual—will shout for the war. The pulp will shout for the war. The great bulk of the nation will rub its sleepy eyes and try to make out why there should be a war, and will say earnestly and indignantly, 'It is unjust and dishonorable, and there is no necessity for it.'"

"Then the handful will shout louder. A few fair men on the other side will argue and reason against the war with speech and pen, and at first will have a hearing and be applauded; but it will not last long; those others will outshine them, and presently the anti-war audiences will thin out and lose popularity."

"Before long you will see this curious thing: the speakers stoned from the platform, and free speech strangled by hordes of furious men who in their secret hearts are still at one with those stoned speakers—as earlier—but do not dare to say so."

"And now the whole nation—pulpit and all—will take up the war-cry, and shout itself hoarse, and mob any honest man who dares to open his mouth; and presently such mouths will cease to open."

Mussolini Warned

expect encountered in a survey of the campaign directed by General Sir Robert Napier who defeated Emperor Theodore in the Anglo-Ethiopian war of 1867-1868.

At that time armies needed few of the supplies necessary today and Napier moved away from the Red Sea with 42,000 soldiers, and about 10,000 baggage carriers and men of all work. He reached and stormed Magdala with only 3,500 men, all but 10 per cent of his original strength. The rest were claimed by rigors of the campaign, enemy attacks, or strung back along the long line of the base.

The history of this campaign leads English observers to believe that if Italy moves 250,000 men out of Eritrea, less than 25,000 ever would reach Addis Ababa. There they would face a precarious fate, dependent upon the strength of their enemies in that sector and the ability of the men they left behind to keep food, ammunition, medicine, clothing and even water coming forward.

Staff Warns Mussolini

A break in this line for even a week might reduce the Italian army to starvation. Living off the country would be impossible for such an army. With no ammunition factories or other industry in the empire, the troops would be wholly dependent upon what came forward by mule.

All of these factors are believed to have been detailed by the Italian general staff in a report submitted to Mussolini month ago. Military sources here understand it Duce exploded when he read its recommendations to forego the African adventure because of its almost insurmountable difficulties, and tore up the report, exclaiming:

"Fascism will march straight ahead of victory."

The general staff report, reliable sources here understand, said it would require half a million men from 8 to 10 years completely to subjugate the Ethiopians. The cost, they said, would be prohibitive.

sanctions against Italy, were attacked.

But France Seeks Pact PARIS, France—(AP)—France sent assurance to Great Britain Monday she would give her armed aid on land, at sea and in the air in case Britain is attacked while preparing to enforce League of Nations sanctions—provided the British would come to the aid of France in a similar emergency.

A French note to London fixing the conditions for aiding the British fleet if it is attacked in the Mediterranean during the Italo-Ethiopian conflict was described as bargaining for aid in similar circumstances involving Germany.

The note named these conditions: 1. Great Britain and France will consult each other before taking action.

2. Whatever measures are taken after consultation will not be considered provocation for attack by a third power; and

3. If either France or Great Britain is attacked for measures taken after such consultation and its resultant agreement, the other will aid the one attacked.

Britain's confirmation of the conditions was solicited by the French ambassador to London who asked the

McNaught Meets Berry on Thursday

"Black Dragon" Will Wrestle Ligosky at Second Street Arena

What promises to be the best wrestling card here in weeks is scheduled Thursday night at the American Legion arena on East Second street.

Promoter Bert Mauldin announced Tuesday that Ralph "Wild Red" Berry, champion meanie of the mat and one of the best drawing attractions in the light heavyweight division, would meet Scotty McNaught, clever Canadian, in the feature event.

Berry has wrestled in Hope, once, appearing before a record crowd to meet Frankie Hill. Scotty McNaught will make his first appearance Thursday night. He has been doing well at Little Rock. A few weeks ago he held Jack McDonald to a draw.

In the other event, Promoter Mauldin will send "The Black Dragon," mystery man of the mat, against George Ligosky, 180-pound Russian. Ligosky lost a 2 to 1 decision here last week against Bob Montgomery.

"The Black Dragon," in his first match here last Thursday, proved too tough a meanie for Barney Cosneck. The show starts at 8 p. m.

British foreign secretary "to place me in a position where I can assure my government of the agreement of his majesty's government with all these points."

That's All There Is To the collection of strange and curious epitaphs from old cemeteries, Walter A. Dyer, of Amherst, Mass., adds the following, taken from a headstone in a nearby cemetery: Here lies entombed old Roger Morton. Whose sudden death was oddly brought on.

Trying one day his corn to mow off. His razor slipped and cut his toe off. An inflammation quickly flew to. The member took to mortifying. And poor old Roger took to dying.
